

Dialogue ouvert à Parakou : les acteurs échangent pour la résilience climatique

The NGO Save Our Planet organized a fruitful dialogue on November 4, 2023, including diverse experts, citizens, and passionate farmers, to discuss the climate impacts in Benin and other African countries. They stressed the need for localized resilience strategies, farmer education, and climate justice. The participants emphasized the negative consequences of increased agricultural modernization and persistent climate change without appropriate interventions.

Concassage de granite à Parakou : Entre survie et risques sanitaires

Bénin, like other West African countries, aims for development but struggles with youth underemployment and unemployment. Many citizens are compelled to do risky, dangerous jobs, such as the granite quarry workers in Parakou, who lack protective equipment and expose themselves to numerous diseases. They are appealing for government assistance and social support for better working conditions.
